

After a sick passage of 8 hours I am at last with a heavy heart <sup>arrived</sup> at Dover, very much fatigued & low spirited; I set out early tomorrow morning on my route to London where I hope to arrive in the same evening. I staid 3 days with my Aunt at Tour-nay & embarked this morning at 12 o'clock on the fatal vessel which was to convey me to England, I was almost tempted several times to wish never to see land again, when I thought of the dreadful avenir which I have every reason to expect - but when I reflect that I am conducted here by a Divine Providence who will certainly never abandon <sup>me</sup>, I take courage & resolve to suffer all with patience, for the love of a God who has always been infinitely good to me, who hitherto protected me & whom I trust ever will. The idea of having quitted Panshemont makes me very unhappy, but I hope that it is not for ever & that I shall again be happy. I wrote to Edgeworth just now, charming man! what obligations am I not under to him! he has been the means of my salvation dite lui mille et mille choses de ma part. He -

- mention me kindly to Madame Jaubertheim & Madame de Lint - My best love to Lambert & Madame de Schrij, to Beikere, d'Harcourt, Boit-doux and all my other friends & companions, nuns & sisters, chac-que en particulier - I have as yet heard nothing of Hawkins, I suppose she is still at Bologne - Tell Madame Wauger that I have passed her box but with difficulty - Would you be so good as to tell Madame Jaubertheim that my aunt will call for my sheets in a day or two & that I beg she will not mention to her anything about the money, thank her for all her goodness to me, both she & Mad. de Lint. Adieu my dear girl, I am too sleepy to add any more - Adieu - Your friend Julia

Would you beg Boit-doux to give you the songs she wrote out for me, that you may send them to me, & I shall be obliged to you to send me the words of "J'ai tout perdu" with "Lindorf" - Once more Adieu - Adieu - Keep Polly for me -
